It would be the irony of fate if, for the purpose of avoiding obstacles to the combinations, by which invested capital means to defy, the demands of organized labor in the future, the hands of labor were deliberately strengthened. Yet this is apparently what has happened. Attracting more attention than at any time before since the Flower boom two years ago. The Morgan boom is far greater than the Flower market was in every way—inclusive of its spectacular effects. The trasic denouement of the Flower boom in the death of its principal actor is not likely to find any counterpart in the present campaign, however, and it is therefore to be hoped that such a tremendous smash of prices as followed. Mr. Flower's death will be lacking also in the climax of the present market. But that there must come a break in prices, and a serious one, at some time in the near future nearly everyone seems to believe.

The questions are being asked in Wall

The questions are being asked in Wall Street with more and more frequency, as the steady rise in the general price level continues, who is buying the stocks for which such urgent bids are in the market, and what does the buyer propose to do with them? If a mob of speculative outsiders were clamoring for stocks which 'insiders' have for sale, as was the case fit January and April of 1889, the market would be easy to understand. Fixing of prices would then be governed by nothing but the duration of the public's craze, In greater or less degree, this element exirts in the present market. But it is not a controlling factor—certainly not in any such sense as it was two years ago. A very large part of this outside element is skeptical over the market and sells, therefore, quite an readily as it buys.

During the earlier stages of the movement institution buying played an important part in decreasing the supply of stocks. But this propelling movement

The market, in fact, seems likely to siderably higher level.

The market, in fact, seems likely to veer into the industrials very pronouncedly in the near future. If a break is allowed by Mr. Morgan some time soon, the industrials may start the revival later. Or it is possible that they may be boomed immediately, while the big people are getting out of their holdings of railway securities. Buying of the industrial shares hast week reflected a greater disposition on the part of investors to pick up the attractive shares of the last named group, while the heavy speculative buying in the steel stocks induced increased speculative operations classwhere in the industrial list. The preferred shares selling under par and yielding from 8 to 19 per cent will doubtless work higher before the summer.

The extraordinary advance in the price

Where shares are bought for control, with the shrewd porpose of selling them over to a second corporation and letting the public eventually raise the settlement money, the violout rise in prices is in evitable. To this buying, also, there must be some limit. Buying, also, there must be some limit, buying, also, there must be some limit. Buying, also, there must be some limit, buying, also, there must be some limit, buying, also, there must be some limit. Buying, also, there must be some limit, buying control of a property meets failure, there is no sudden and continuous break of prices. Most of the people who bought stocks under suich conditions have seemed content to bloid. Yet, granting this fact, very little light is cast on the question who bought the shares for investment, a meanth ago, are still buying at present prices. But if not buying, they are apparently not yet selling, and in many quarters of the market some one clae is putting in buying orders.

It is a prevalent belief that the stock market is being "held" by powerful subjucting in buying orders.
